

Montcalm's Cross Visitor Schedule
Sunday, July 21, 2019

On July 5, 1758 nearly 16,000 British and American soldiers under the command of General James Abercrombie embarked in over 1,000 boats from Lake George to crush the French at Fort Carillon (Ticonderoga). This was the largest army ever assembled in North America by that time and after landing, pushed toward the French forces. In the meantime, less than 4,000 French troops, commanded by the Marquis de Montcalm, prepared a defensive breastwork on the heights of Carillon, west of the fort itself. There, on July 8, the British made their attack. Beginning just after noon, waves of British and American troops threw themselves at the French lines hoping to break through, and were repulsed each time. The fighting raged until nearly nightfall, and at the end of the day, Montcalm's French defenders still held their positions. The fighting had cost the British alone nearly 2,000 men, killed and wounded. It had been the bloodiest battle of the 18th century in North America. Ticonderoga had earned a nearly mythical reputation that would secure its place in the history for centuries to come.

9:30 am Fort Ticonderoga opens to visitors

10:00 am Inspection of the Armies (Inside the Fort and Carillon Battlefield)

Watch as the French Forces of General Montcalm assemble on the parade of Fort Carillon (later named Fort Ticonderoga) for inspection and to receive orders for these climactic days of 1758. At the temporary camp of General Abercrombie's British and Provincial Army, soldiers and sentinels assemble to prepare for their advance on Fort Carillon.
